We have about 100,000 hairs on our heads. Each hair shaft has three layers, with the cuticle, or outside layer, protecting the two inner layers.

Shiny hair is a sign of health because the layers of the cuticle lie flat and reflect light. When the scales of the cuticle lie flat they overlap tightly, so the inner layers are well protected from heat, sun, chlorine, and all the other hazards that can come from living in our environment.

So do blondes have more fun? No - but they do have more hair. People with blond hair have more hairs on their heads than people with brown or red hair.

When hair is damaged, though, the scales may separate and hair can become dry. Because the scales on dry hair do as well, hair can break and look dull.

The type of hair a person has — wavy, straight, curly, or kinky — can also affect how shiny it is. Sebum, the oil that covers straight hair better than curly hair, can appear shinier.

Depending how long a person's hair is, the end of each hair shaft can be a couple or years old. So the hair at the end of the shaft could have survived a few summers of scorching sun and saltwater and winters of cold, dry air. How well you care for your hair from the time it emerges from the root plays a role in how healthy it looks.

Speaking in public (Britney, in Scotland)

At school we sometimes used to do presentations in front of the class. Once I had to do a presentation about a book. I spent a week worrying about the presentation. I didn't sleep well and I couldn't concentrate. Finally, the day arrived. I was really scared. I was sweating and my hands were shaking. I gave my presentation. I was like a zombie. It was a really bad presentation, not because of what I said, but because I was nervous and couldn't remember what I wanted to say. Then I watched as my classmates did their presentations. They made it look easy. This helped me a lot. I decided that it was silly to be so nervous. The next time I did a presentation it was much better. These days, I really enjoy speaking in public.
